Message From The Department Chair

---

Despite the unprecedented challenge under which we're working, the Department's researchers remained productive and effective this year. The list of publications, grants, awards, and accomplishments in this year's report is long, and could offer fodder for many comments. The one that strikes me most though is focus. The many publications, grants, and projects in this report come out of a small but diverse group of very focused research teams. Each team's sense of focus is a crucial factor in how they achieve the high level of productivity and impact that the DoFM's research teams do. That same focus has enabled the teams to maintain their productivity and impact despite having to work in a very different, and frequently changing, way. That makes for much more than a good annual report; it means that the important work they are doing for the province and people of Alberta is going forward, despite the upheaval of our times.

Dr. Lee Green, Professor and Chair

INTRODUCTION BY THE RESEARCH DIRECTOR

Our responsiveness and ability to adapt has been the key to our success this past year. We had to adjust and work around the changes imposed on us by COVID-19 pandemic. Previous activities that required in-person visits were impacted and we found ways to work from home, run virtual meetings and still collaborate effectively.

Despite the upheaval, our research program has continued to thrive. Our research covers the breadth of primary care and family medicine inquiry and addresses the research needs of our community as illustrated by our response to COVID-19. The numerous seed grants through the Northern Alberta Academic Family Physicians Fund increased our research capacity by facilitating the refinement of projects that can then compete for large peer-reviewed funding. You can read about several COVID-19 seed funded research projects that have then received larger peer-reviewed funds in this report. There are also COVID-19 related publications on the implications of COVID-19 for clinical care and medical education. Our evidence-based resources in the Tools for Practice section inform primary care providers about COVID-19 vaccines and more. Practice quality improvement projects completed by our residents included improvement projects related to COVID-19. Our research response to COVID-19 highlights how rapidly our research program has addressed the research needs of our communities.

Enjoy the read - Dr. Donna Manca, Director of Research
