This seminar will consider the meanings of bodies and souls in relationship with one another, and in relationship with death and life, through a theological lens. The question of what constitutes a good death is immediately connected with the question of what constitutes a good life. The tradition of the Ars Moriendi, a guide to the art of dying, considers bodies and souls over the course of life, while moving toward death. How might bodies and souls inform a contemporary Ars Moriendi and its ethical implications?
